

SPEAKER SERIES/ APPROACHES TO LAW AND LEGAL METHOD

Spring 2020, Kent Law School, University of Kent

Kent Law School has a rich tradition of researchers working on overlapping questions of law, political economy, social history, governance, development and what may be described as 'social studies of labour regulation'. This speaker series contributes to that ongoing research, bringing together four highly experienced interdisciplinary scholars of law, to reflect on how legal methods evolve, and what it means to be a scholar undertaking humanities-inflected and social science-influenced legal research.

Wednesday 22 January 2020

Tarik Kochi

Senior Lecturer in Law, University of Sussex

'Global Justice and Social Conflict: Questioning the Foundations of Liberal Order and International Law'

Thursday 13 February 2020

Ruth Dukes

Professor of Labour Law, University of Glasgow

'Socio-Legal Methods in Labour Law: Then and Now'

Thursday 5 March 2020

Simon Deakin

Professor of Law, University of Cambridge

'The Use of Quantitative Method in Labour Law'

Tuesday 24 March 2020

Ambreena Manji

Professor of Land Law and Development, Cardiff University

'Searching for Social Reproduction in African Social History'

All talks take place in the Brian Simpson Room, Eliot College Extension, Kent Law School, from 17:30 – 19:30, including a drinks reception. All welcome.

To register, go to: <https://www.kent.ac.uk/law/news>

University of
Kent